Strait of Hormuz (Dream/Word)

Considering the given activity in the Strait of Hormuz during July 2019, I was reminded of a dream I had over seven years ago.

At 2:56 am, on February 5, 2012, I dreamed:

There was a body of water with ships off in the distance. Behind the ships were mountains—a mountain range seemed to border this sea. The day seemed to be either hazy or foggy. It was as if I were looking through a hazy atmosphere. The water was calm and there was no discernible activity. At one point, I thought I was literally in this place. Was I literally there in spirit?

I woke up and heard: Strait of Hormuz.

Anyone who follows the news in the Middle East knows that the Strait of Hormuz is a danger spot whenever there is a conflict brewing with Iran.

When I received this dream, I had never seen a picture of this strait, so I searched for one online. What I found looked just like what I saw in the dream. In the dream, it was as if I was actually viewing the strait from an elevated position as I viewed a mountain range in the background. However, without being told what I was seeing, I am not sure I would have figured it out on my own.

The hazy atmosphere could have been one of two things: either, it was simply the heat of the region making it hazy, or it meant further clarity was needed to understand the dream. As noted, the scene seemed to be calm with ships in the area. There was no apparent conflict.

But then, 155 days later, on July 8, 2012, I dreamed:

A battleship was on fire. The metal of the ship was glowing red and orange and becoming very brittle, cracking. Then, the ship broke into two sections and sank.

Are the two dreams related? Given the recent rise in tensions in this region, it is worth keeping an eye on. This may be related to some other prophetic insights I have received involving this region.
